1. No changes are known to have occurred up to 2 September 1950 in the strength or disposition of the units of the 24th Air Army, with the partial exception noted below (para. 5).
2. There was no flying during the afternoon and night of 31 August 1950. This is believed to have been due to bad weather.
3. During the day on 1 September there was normal flying activity. The following units were identified:
 - One fighter regiment at Alt-Lönnewitz.
 - Two fighter regiments at Zerbst.
 - One reconnaissance regiment at Stendal.
4. During the night of 1-2 September very little flying activity was observed. One plane apparently lost its way over Rügen Island, and returned to its home field, flying a 1450 course, presumably in the direction of Peenemünde.
5. On 2 September, two previously unknown units were observed; there is some evidence that these are fighter units, but it is not known whether they are newly arrived in Germany or not. A unit hitherto unknown but believed to be a fighter unit was observed also on 3 September; this may be identical with one of the units observed on the previous day.
